

Construction Skills After Brexit: Breakfast Briefing

To be held in Central London | Thursday, 14th September 2017

Background:

The Prime Minister has announced that her Government will seek to leave the Single Market as part of its Brexit negotiations. This could have a significant impact upon recruitment within the construction industry, which employs 176,500 workers from the European Union - nearly 10 percent of the total workforce. London is particularly at risk from the changes, with a quarter of its construction workers coming from the EU.

It is vital that the construction industry is ready to meet the potential workforce challenges that could arise as a result of Brexit, with recruiting and training British workers likely to be a key priority.

Join our Breakfast Briefing on 14th September for an opportunity to discuss what Brexit means for skills and recruitment in construction and what the industry can do to prepare for the future.
